

The EPISCenter, a project of the Prevention Research Center in Penn State's College of Health and Human Development, has openings for both interns (wage-payroll) and Graduate Research Assistantships in their State College office for Summer and Fall semesters 2009, and Spring semester 2010.

The EPISCenter will be using GIS technology to map project sites and resources, to coordinate GPS users throughout the state who will be geocoding relevant waypoints to create community resource maps, and creating interactive web-based mapping tools for use by end users, for several Pennsylvania statewide crime prevention and community-building projects.

Interested applicants should send a resume or CV with cover letter describing experience, GIS software used, and examples of projects they have worked on and their role in the project, to Brian Bumbarger, Director of the Evidence-based Prevention and Intervention Support Center, at bkb10@psu.edu.

Positions are open immediately and will remain open until filled.
